HAYTI.

Amongst the many articles of intelligence which have reached us so recently from abroad, we discover none more interesting than the information received from St. Domingo. It appears that his ebony majesty Christophe, has determined to maintain the independence of Hayti, and is busily employed in strengthening and in augmenting his naval force, in constructing ramparts and fortresses so as to place the island in the best possible state of defence. His majesty has already founded a college and he invites learned men from Europe to superintend the education of the rising generation in the character of professors—these men are distinguished by the bounties and reward of his majesty. The emperor states it in his proclamation to be the indispensible duty of his subjects to harbor an hereditary animosity against France, which he considers as the surest guarantee to the independence of Hayti. He has already established a school on the model of Lancaster, for the education of youth, which bids fair to be followed by the happiest effects. In order to remove every vestige of French influence, his majesty proposes to extirpate the French language. He has ordered the children of Hayti to be instructed in the English language, to adopt English manners, and he endeavors to rule by English laws. He scouts in his proclamation the idea that his countrymen are by nature subordinate—he declares that this results solely from the education of the blacks. This will afford a fair experiment, better ten thousand times than all theoretical reasonings on this important question, whether these men are not susceptible of civilization?

What a singular era will the present age afford! While France which was once regarded as the seat of refinement and elegance, is now environed by hostile armies to preserve the quietude of Europe; while tumults and riots are constantly breaking out in England; while these disgraceful events are marking the history of the present day in those governments, where we formerly looked for the administration of law and justice,—the sable emperor of St. Domingo is employed in civilizing his subjects and in pouring upon their minds the rays of science, in founding schools and universities! We read of no outrages, no riots in his dominions. Would not the government of France shrink from a comparison with the government of Hayti!—

Fed. Rep.

From a late London paper.

Celebration of the Emperor Alexander's Birth-Day.—On Tuesday night the Commanders and Officers of his Imperial Majesty's Russian ships the Mercury and Philadelphia, gave a most splendid ball and supper, on board of the Mercury lying off Woolwich, in commemoration of the birth of the Emperor Alexander, who was born on the 12th day of December, 1777 (old stile.) At eight o'clock the company began to arrive in boats from the shore; and although the night was tempestuous and the water rough, the ladies were not in the remotest degree dismayed. At the approach of every boat a trumpet was sounded, in the true ancient baronial manner, and the Captain (Katchaloff) ushered the company into the ball room. Dancing commenced at half past eight o'clock, led off by Captain Katchaloff and a lady, whose name we could not obtain. By ten o'clock no less than 200 persons were tripping "on the light fantastic toe," accompanied alternately by the Russian and Royal Artillery bands. At one o'clock in the morning the company were summoned to supper between decks, where every delicacy the season could afford was provided upon massive plate. The apartments, however, were found to be too confined for the whole of the company, and many Gentlemen were under the necessity of eating their supper standing. During supper Captain Katchaloff gave—"The Emperor Alexander"—The Prince Regent"—The Grand Duke Nicholas."—and finally—"The Ladies." All of which were drank in bumpers of claret. One of the Officers then proposed the health of the Gentlemen who honoured them with their company, and one of the Commissioners of the Royal Dock-yard returned thanks for the obligation. After supper, waltzing and dancing were recommenced with great vigour. Part of the company, however, retired to the state cabin, and made libations at the shrine of Bacchus. At five o'clock the dancing ceased, and the company began to separate—not, however, before the band sung a national anthem, which was encored by the company. It was nearly six o'clock before the whole of the company had separated.

From the London Courier, Dec. 5.

Sir GREGOR M'GREGOR, the leader of the independents in South America, is the representative of a respectable and ancient family, was captain of our army in Spain, became colonel in the Spanish service, had a Spanish order of knighthood conferred upon him, and was allowed by the prince regent to assume the title in this country. In Spain he fought to free the country from invaders; but when he saw its present monarch reward the friends of liberty with dungeons and death, he gladly joined the party in America, who were endeavoring to emancipate themselves from the oppressions of the mother country.

His intimacy with one of the royal dukes distinguished for his liberality and whigish principles, is said to add to his influence with his compatriots. He left Scotland with the suitable retinue of a general, to which as a Highlander he thought a piper a necessary addition. Whatever turn affairs take in the new world, it must be a proud consideration for Scotland, that Americans fought for liberty under a Scottish chieftain, and marched to battle to the sound of her native pipe. The gentleman who has given the information, adds, that Sir Gregor is not only a gentleman by birth, education and manners, but he is also a man of considerable literary attainments, and he took with him on his chivalrous expedition, a noble library.

REMARKABLE PHENOMENON.

FROM THE VERMONT REPUBLICAN.

The following extract from a communication of Joel Manning jun. Esq. of Andover, Vermont, a gentleman of undoubted veracity, to the editor of this paper, we think not unworthy the attention of the curious. It has since been ascertained that similar appearances were noticed the same night, by some people passing over a high ground in Reading, a place eighteen or twenty miles north of Andover.

The circumstances of which I speak, took place at Andover, Vt. It will be recollected by all in this vicinity, that on the evening of the 18th of January last, there was a heavy fall of snow, accompanied with lightening and thunder. Happening to be from home that evening, I came out of a neighbor's house in company with a young man, my brother, between the hours of ten and eleven. We noticed that the snow fell very fast, but our attention was particularly attracted by the frequent flashes of lightening. After passing a few rods, we observed, on the top of a stake in the fence, a light resembling a blaze of fire, about two or three inches in length though not so red and brilliant. We soon observed that on every stake was a light, and also on the highest branches of bushes by the side of the fence. This excited so much wonder and curiosity that we called to the people in the house, and also to some who were at the same time passing the street, to see the same phenomenon. We soon observed it on our hats, hair and mittens, when held up, not in the form of a blaze, but of bright white sparks of various sizes, from those which were but just discernable to those of the size of a large buck shot.

We found by examination that upon any thing that was tolerable smooth, and without limbs, there was no light except at the top. We viewed these blazes at the distance of about a foot and a half; there form was precisely that of an inverted cone, seemingly standing on the smallest possible point, whose height was to its greatest diameter as three to one.

On one stake there were three of these blazes. On two or three stakes, upon which they appeared the most vivid, they emitted a sound resembling the hissing of water in a tea-kettle, just before it boils. This sound could be distinctly heard at the distance of ten or twelve feet. Those blazes would disappear at the approach of a stick, viz. a whip staff, (as that was the instrument made use of in the experiment) within a little less than two feet; but I since recollect, that in all cases when this experiment was tried, the top of the staff was considerably higher than the stake; which accounts, in part, for its remaining, though with a less degree of brilliancy, when our hands or heads were much nearer, but not so high.

After viewing it for some time, we proceeded homeward; as we passed over a piece of rising ground, our hats and shoulders were almost covered with this light; and when we spit, the small particles of spittle at the distance of six or eight inches from the mouth, assumed a shining appearance. These lights were to be seen for three quarters of a mile except when by the side or in a piece of standing timber. We returned again about twelve o'clock, when there appeared full as much or more light on our clothes, but no appearance of those conical figures, and consequently no hisisng.

According to what observations and experiments we made, I feel justified in making the following remarks:—That this was only visible on high land at some distance from the place where we were standing. Respecting the forest trees, I can only say that we saw no light on them.—Lights might be there and we not see them through the falling snow. To be sure, our experiments were all of them near the ground; but as far as we know, the higher in the air, the greater the quantity of light: and, as far as we are acquainted, it increased very fast. From the height of my head to that of my hand, with my arm erected at full length, it appeared almost doubled.

It appears that the wind increased this light, by this experiment; stand your back to the wind, place your hand and fingers up, mitten on, about eight inches from your breast, so that a spark would be seen on the highest point of the mitten, turn facing the wind, with your hands in the same situation, and there would be more sparks, and those larger. Even in that state of the air the concurrence of many circumstances seemed necessary to produce the appearance of a conical blaze or hissing; that upon which it must be higher than any thing near, as there were many stakes in the fence, but upon only two or three of the highest were these appearances. It must be without ramification: for upon briars of equal height with those stakes there, were none. It must also be capped with snow: for after brushing the snow from those which before had this appearance, a light remained, but it lost its conical form and the sound was also extinct.

All the circumstances I have stated can be attested by two or three witnesses, and most of them by five or six.

I have since heard, to the distance of two or three miles in different directions, of lights of the same kind being seen not in such a quantity, but generally one individual light.

(It is understood that this phenomenon was also noticed at Dover, and other towns in that vicinity, on the same evening.)

"Nil Desperandum."—When the Vulture of France was pursuing his work of destruction on the continent of Europe, the inhabitants of this country, notwithstanding the temporary advantages which they derived from the distresses of contending nations, and the belief that they were secured by distance from immediate danger; could not avoid sympathizing in the calamities of their fellow creatures, and viewing with the most serious apprehensions the resistless course of this demon of desolation. But, thanks to the Author of all good, the power of the fiend is no more, and Peace again extends her blessings to the great family of mankind. The consequences, however, which have resulted from the sudden change which has lately occurred; a transition from the noise and bustle and hurricane of war, to a state of general tranquility and repose, are not of the most agreeable character; and though they may have been anticipated, yet they could not have been desired. In France, the proscription list has succeeded to that of a military conscription; and the scaffold is substituted for the triumphal arch. In England, a disbanding of the navy and army has superseded the pressgangs of the Thames and the Severn; while the spirit of rebellion is rearing its hydra front in all parts of the kingdom. In Spain, the Inquisition, seated on the blood-cemented throne recently erected by the valour of a royal and generous people, is employed only in marking victims for the wheel; enriching the Church by the murder of heretics.

America also felt the shock. When the fetters of commercial restriction, in which they had been so long bound, was shaken off, the citizens of the United States always enterprizing and industrious, launched into trade with a precipitancy and zeal, which in the view of any discreet man, would have been considered unerring precursors of the ruin that was to follow. The markets were soon glutted with goods, for which there was no article of exportation in those parts of the country which had imported most, to be offered in exchange.—Embarrassments necessarily ensued. The merchant's hopes were blasted; the manufacturer was thrown out of employ; and the sailor was driven from ploughing the ocean, to plough the western wilderness.—But although, in common with other commercial nations, we have suffered much, in consequence of the mad ambition of one man; yet all is not lost; and there is a consolation, though a melancholy one, in reflecting, that we have not been reduced so low as many, who but a few years since were far above us in opulence and power. We still are FREE—While other nations are groaning beneath the yoke of oppression, and millions are bending at the foot-stool of despotism, we are subjected to no restraints but those which we have voluntarily assumed; and have no master to rule over us, that is not responsible for his conduct.—While the grand drama was acting on the theatre of Europe, kings were made and unmade at the pleasure of the Tragedian; crowns crumbled beneath his feet; and kingdom after kingdon vanished at his nod. We remain unhurt. The only Republic on earth stood like a pyramid in the desert, braving the ravages of time, and unmoved by the violence of tempests. Yes, we have escaped miraculously. And have we not cause to rejoice at our good fortune?—We have, it is true, been obliged to drink deep of the cup of humiliation at times; we have witnessed misconduct and imbecility in our councils; we have bowed beneath the pressure of heavy burthens; but we are still INDEPENDENT. Who that has taken a retrospective view of what has passed in the political world, during the last ten years, does not feel grateful for the blessings which we still enjoy, and is not ready to exclaim with an overflowing heart, "It is of the Lord's mercies that we were not consumed? [Con. Herald.

The House of Assembly of the state of New-York, on Wednesday the 12th inst. in committee of the whole, Mr. Waldbridge in the chair, had under consideration the bill for the abolition of slavery within that state; when, after an animated discussion, the question on the clause of declaring all negroes, mulattoes and mustees witnin that state, FREE, after the 4th day of July, one thousand eight hundred and twenty seven, was carried in the affirmative, by a large majority.

We have often heard of Yankee speculation, but conceive this to be about the climax.

RICHMOND, March 13.

The Climate.—Nothing is so changeful and capricious as our Climate, except an experienced Coquette—She seems to have no settled rules to regulate her conduct; but at one moment beams with smiles, at another is clouded with frowns, now all life, all joy, all warmth, and sunshine; the next hour, is as cold as the icicle that hangs on Diana's temple. One moment, while her adorer is melting into raptures, and "ripening into" happiness, under the beam of her eye, the next moment a frost comes to nip the bud" of his hopes—No one can anticipate in one moment what she will be in the next—all is irregular and shifting—nothing certain but the uncertainty of her humours.

So it has been with our climate for the two last weeks—now fair---then cloudy---at this moment, warm and genial---the next, cold and shivering---now the air of the temperate zone---and then, the chilling blasts of the frigid. During the last week, the air was balmy and delightful—no sign of ice—frequently no fire on hearths—all vegetable and animal nature gave tokens of this agreeable visitation; the grass had grown green upon the fields, and the frogs sung merrily in the ponds. On Sunday, and Monday last, the same signs of spring---On Monday night, for several hours, we had the thunder storm almost of a summer's eve; streams of lightning played through the sky, and peals of thunder re-echoed through the vault of heaven. Indeed, a more abundant and continued phenomenon of the electric fluid, we never witnessed at this season of the year—it was a singular scene. On Monday Evening and Tuesday Morning, genial showers of rain, resembling those of a fine summer day. On Tuesday, the same warmth of spring. On Tuesday night, the wind veered to the North. The air became suddenly chilled; a cold rain began to fall, which before morning terminated in hail and snow—and during the whole of yesterday, we had alternate showers of rain, hail and snow, until the last finally obtained the mastery; and last evening, (when these hasty remarks were written for the press) the whole earth was one bed of snow. It is not past five o'clock, the snow two inches and an half deep; and it is still falling. Before this day, however, is ended, the whole phenomenon may vanish, and the green grass re-appear to our view.

Compiler.

Bothering a Judge and Jury.—On the 23d November, in the Irish Court of King's bench, commenced the trial of "the King v. O'Grandy," the attorney general took one day to state the case and bring evidence on the part of the Crown; Mr. Plunket, with much conciseness, only occupied Monday and Tuesday, in stating the case of the defendant: on Wednesday his evidence was gone through: the court adjourned to Friday, when Mr. Burton, for the defendant spoke to evidence: on Saturday he had only a few remaining topics to descant upon, so that it was hoped, from the brevity he had already exercised, that his speech would, at the most, not take up more than two more days, so that the trial was expected to be concluded in about another week: there can be no doubt, that all this elocution has made the matter very clear to the jury, provided they did not fall asleep.

From the Petersburg Intelligencer, March 12,

MR. PINCKNEY'S LATE NEGOCIATION.

By an arrival from Naples, the following account of the tenor, and result of Mr. Pinckney's negociation has been received. Mr. Pinckney made a preremptory demand of the restitution of several vessels seized by Murat, or a complete indemnification for them and their cargoes. With regard to the rest, he offered to wave all claim on the part of his government, on condition that the U. States, should have an establishment in some convenient port in the Neapolitan territories. He particularized Messina as the most eligible, and stated, that the required establishment, would comprise an hospital for naval stores, and some telegraph stations. The Neapolitan government, affecting not to perceive the drift of the demand couched in these terms, though it was impossible to misapprehend it, requested of Mr. Pinckney to inform them whether the establishment was to be considered as an avowed government concern, or whether it was to be on the footing of the establishments of private individuals. Mr. Pinckney without hesitation, intimated that it must be regarded as a government establishment The Neapolitan government, on receiving this explanation, rejected the demand in toto; intimating, at the same time, that there would be no objection to the agents of the U. S. Government keeping naval stores in the Neapolitan dominions, on the footing of the ordinary mercantile depots. The negociations with regard to the confiscated vessels, terminated in a manner equally unsatisfactory to Mr. Pinckney.

The prisoners that were confined in the jail at Goshen, (Orange County) broke the prison last Thursday night, and made their escape.—Two were taken the next morning severely crippled. It seems that they made ropes of their blankets to let themselves down from the window of their cell into the jail-yard, and while two lusty fellows were carefully descending, the rope gave way and in the fall they broke their limbs. [N. York Ev. Post.

INDIAN OUTRAGE.

Extract of a letter from a respectable gentleman, dated St. Mary's, (Ga.) March 1, 1817.

"We had a dreadful scene in this country—a woman and her two children have been killed and scalped by the lower Creek Indians within a few days—a proper representation has been made to the governor and general Gaines. I wish you could by your exertion, have a small force of one company stationed on this river, for the protection of the frontier, or the trade will be broken up."

Foreign Articles.

Mr. Coles, late private Secretary of the Ex-President Madison, had arrived at Paris, from St. Petersburgh, and had announced to the Minister of the U. States of America, at the Court of France, the amicable settlement of all differences between the Courts of Russia and the United States.

The British Government have complimented the American Consul, in London, as almost the only one who takes care of the suffering seamen of his country in England.

There is a curious document from Constantinople: it is a kind of "state of the nation" at the close of 1816, and from it we learn the curious fact, that the holy alliance of the European sovereigns, nearly frightened the Turks out of their senses.

Letters from Warsaw entirely contradict the pretended intelligence of an extraordinary levy of conscripts in Poland.

The Prince Regent of England has directed that in future, all the vessels in the navy shall be distinguished by the number of guns and carronades they actually mount, and not according to the erroneous denominations which had long ago grown into use.

Since the fourth of June, 1814, the British army has lost, in the field, or by natural deaths, no fewer than sixty three general officers.

Expeditious Painting.—Paris, among other novelties, has lately boasted of a most expeditious painter. The rapidity of his pencil is really astonishing. He paints a portrait in water colors in two hours—give him three hours he will finish one in oils.——He will complete a profile in a quarter of an hour, and a slight sketch in a minute. He can finish a picture of two or three feet in two days. The Ladies of fashion visit him with their families at ten in the morning and carry with them to dinner finished likenesses.
